

This research report reflects studies conducted to assess and evaluate the nature of ICT policy coverage in policy-influential media in Kenya, Mozambique, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Nigeria, Ethiopia and Senegal. Issues raised in this research report include questions of language and appropriate content, knowledge valuations, and some of the assumptions within the global ICT discourse that impact on media understandings of and interactions with ICTs.

This research has been made possible by funding assistance from the CATIA ICT Policy Advocacy Programme in Africa. Publication costs were covered by MultiChoice Africa, official satellite broadcast partner of Highway Africa.
